

Are You a Casual Travel Photographer? Me too.

By Susan E L Lake
©2022 SusanLakePhotography.com

Up Up And Away To Explore the World of Photography For the Rest of Us

I consider myself at best a casual photographer. I take my camera along wherever I go, but it's just for fun. That's fine with me. I don't earn my living that way and don't want to which is good because much of my travel photography is done under less than ideal conditions. I always chuckle at the professional articles that mark out the precise time each day under which one should try to photograph a site. Hah! I'm usually on one of those "if it's Tuesday it must be Denmark" trips which means that there are no choices of time or often even place. The excursion operator makes those decisions for me. And I must photograph whatever the weather is. Even if it's raining in Bruges, I still photograph because tomorrow I'll be in Paris. If that also describes your travel, then maybe I can give you some clues (or photography tips) I've discovered along the way.

If you think this is a site that might have ideas or images to let you have more fun with your camera, be sure to sign up for notifications. I'll be posting at least once a week – wherever I am. I'd love to take you along for the ride.

Return to SusanLakePhotography